

Spring in Israel

In Israel, spring is one of the most favorite seasons of most children, though adults and people that are allergic to dust and pollen may not like it because of the dust and blooming. My mother, for example, didn't stop coughing all summer last year from the dust of spring.

Most people prefer a mild spring, but there are extreme changes in weather and dust storms every year. Occasionally you can see the blooming in gardens, usually in the later parts of spring.

Though almost everybody looks forward to spring, they dread what comes after it; the summer. Even though they wouldn't cancel spring if they could, they would freeze spring so summer wouldn't come. In Israel, it is unbearably hot and humid in the summer and it feels like a soup pot.

Though most people like spring because of the blooming, others like the renovation and rebirth. Rebirth is not always very pleasant to people who hang their laundry to dry, because birds eggshells can fall on the laundry, or a bird can form a nest in the laundry.

One of the things my mother doesn't like about spring is the dust storms. She is allergic to dust, and she finds it hard to breathe. It is the same with my sister, and many other people. Another reason why the dust storms are dreaded is because of all the dust that dirties the windows.

Most people would prefer to go out of the country for spring, preferably somewhere in west Europe or the U.S.A. Most people don't go because they don't have enough money, but others don't go because their boss won't give them time off or they have very sensitive stomachs.

Most people prefer to redecorate and replant their yards in spring because they would grow better than if they planted them in the winter. It is best to plant them in the earlier part of spring so that the plant will have a longer life.
